

COMP-584 HW3 Accessibility Findings

Accessibility review for the responsive, table-based email. The review follows the accessibility and table-layout guidance from the COMP-584 Week 3 slides.

Tools / checks

- Chrome: visual and accessibility-oriented browser review of the finished HTML.
- Manual keyboard/link review.
- Source review for semantic headings, image alt text, lang="en", presentation-table roles, readable contrast, and responsive images.

Findings

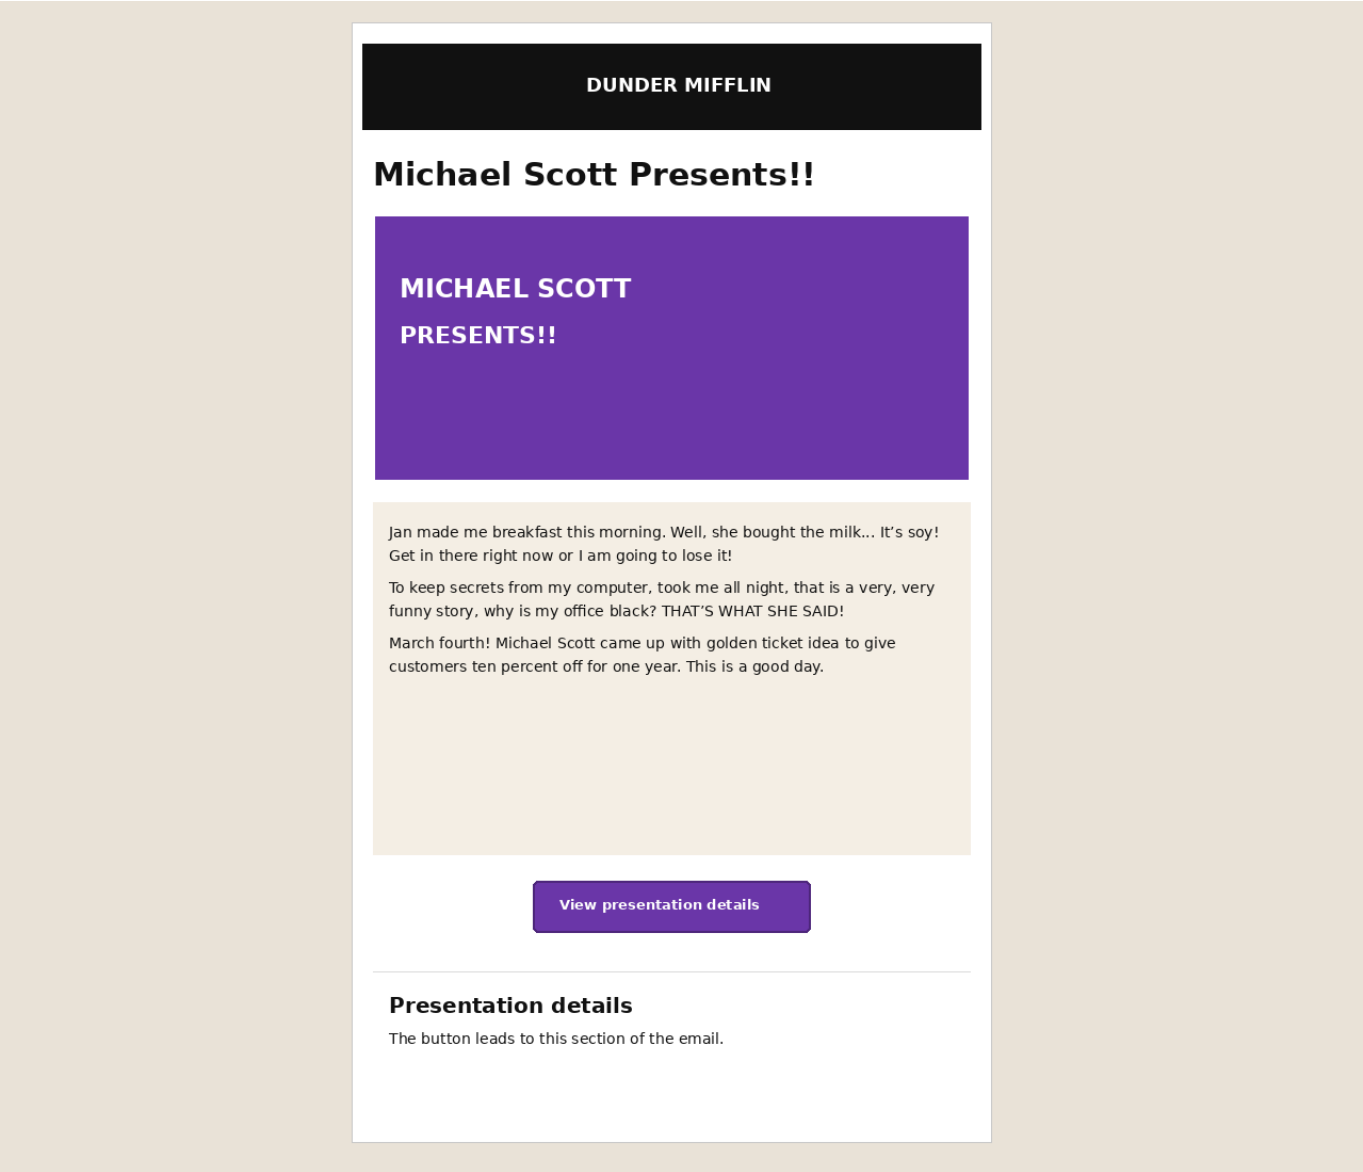

Pros: The document declares lang="en" for assistive technology; layout tables use role="presentation"; the email uses headings and paragraphs for hierarchy; images include descriptive alt text; the hero image includes a fixed HTML width for Outlook plus inline max-width/width rules for responsive scaling; the button has a visible text label, generous padding, border, and centered placement; longer text is left aligned; the layout uses a fluid outer table and a 600px fixed inner table.

Cons / limitations: Background images can be blocked by email clients, so the text area includes a background-color fallback. The button uses an internal fragment link so it has a real destination in the hosted page, but fragment behavior can vary among email clients. A full multi-client test in Outlook/Gmail/Apple Mail would still be needed before production use.

Week 3 alignment

The Week 3 slides recommend descriptive links, avoiding image-only buttons, accessible text alternatives, role="presentation" for layout tables, table/tr/td rather than table header/body/footer elements, a single-column layout, a 600px fixed inner table, and background images on table cells using both HTML attributes and inline CSS.

MICHAEL SCOTT PRESENTS!!

Jan made me breakfast this morning.
Well, she bought the milk... It's soy!
Get in there right now or I am going to lose it!

To keep secrets from my computer, took me all night, that is a very, very funny story, why is my office black?
THAT'S WHAT SHE SAID!

March fourth! Michael Scott came up with golden ticket idea to give customers ten percent off for one year.
This is a good day.
